Section B

1. Personality refers to a person's unique set of characteristics, traits, and behaviours that shape their individuality. It includes aspects such as their emotions, thoughts, and actions. For example, someone with a kind personality would often show empathy and compassion towards others, making them helpful and considerate in their interactions.
2. I know someone who has a funny personality. Their sense of humour influences their behaviour by making them the life of the party. They often crack jokes and make others laugh, creating a lively and enjoyable atmosphere. Their funny personality also helps them build connections and friendships easily because people enjoy being around someone who can make them laugh.
3. Three questions to gather more information about someone's personality and interests could be:
 - a) "What are some activities or hobbies you enjoy in your free time?" This question can provide insights into their interests and preferences, revealing aspects of their personality.
 - b) "How do you typically handle challenging situations or problems?" This question can provide an understanding of their problem-solving skills and their approach to handling difficulties, giving clues about their personality traits like resilience or creativity.
 - c) "What kind of books, movies, or music do you like?" This question can offer insights into their personal preferences, taste, and potentially their values, giving a glimpse into their personality and interests.
